What steps need to be taken when children are abducted by a parent? How can the cross border movement of children be regulated? How does extradition procedure work generally? When is it used and how successfully? Using a working case study, a combination of criminal, extradition and family lawyers aim to highlight many of the legal and practical issues involved in dealing with central authorities and requesting states.

Delegates will be provided with written papers dealing with the substantive law involved. Upon registration, copies of the case study can be obtained in advance. Questions for panel discussion may also be submitted.
